PLATT SEEMS FRIGHTENED.

Apparently Changes Front on Roosevelt Indorsement.

REPUBLIC SPECIAL. New York, Sept. 12 - Senator Platt appears to have taken fright at the storm caused by the attempt of the State machine to ignore President Roosevelt at the coming convention. The programme arranged was to withhold indersement of the administration, but this has been revised.
Bemator Plant said this afterneon that there will be a gathering of Republican leaders in his apartments at the Fifth Avenue Hotel to-morrow to make final arrangements for the State Convention.
When asked if the Republican State Convention would inforce President Roosevelt as a candidate in 1904. Senator Platt replied: 'I don't know; I don't know whether the Presidents wants such an inforcement.
I will say this, however, I think the President deserves the nomination." caused by the attempt of the State ma-

I will say this, however, I think the President deserves the nomination."

Senator Platt did not make the statement in so many words but he gave the impression that the convention would solve the Roosevelt problem by indersing the administration and declaring that he "deserves to be the candidate of the party in 1904." Such a declaration being a mere expression of opinion and in no way binding on the convention.

ume of short stories by Will Payne now just issued from the press of A. C. McClurg & Co., Chicago. The book is handsomely published, with fillustrations by Thomas Fo-garty, one of the Century staff artists.

This young writer of fiction whose "Story of Eva" and "the Money Captain" have al-rendy attracted attention, is probably at his best in the short stories now presented. Of the seven inclued in the present volume two, "A Day in Wheat" and "The End of the Deal," were published in the Century some time ago and were regarded as being bright with promise of higher achievement. In their dramatic construction and narrative style they are the strongest of his work. although the entire group of seven now offered to the reading public is commend-able for smoothness and delicacy of treat-

The scene of the stories is laid in Chicago, and the business and political life of that city furnish their action. It is apparent that Mr. Payne is somewhat familiar with this life, and he selectes his illustrative types with considerable skill and ineight. He has not the strnegth and virility of the Merwin-Webster partnership, which duced "Calumet E." that stirring and intensely realtistic romance of the building of a grain elevator which was a dramatic neessity of a certain "corner" on the Chicago Board of Trade, but sentiment is more pro-nounced in his work and the feminine element figures to a greater extent.
In dramatic value "The End of the Deal" is the most noteworthy of the stories com-prising "On Fortune's Road." It tells of a deal in wheat which led to crime and the attempted suicide of the lockless speculator, and there is a touch of pathos at its close "Dorothy Vernon," by Charles Major; "The Mississippi Bubble," by Emerson Hough; "The Virginian." by Owen Wister, and "In the Country God Forgot," by Frances Charles which will not fail to reach the reader's heart. "A Day in Wheat" may be described as a comedy of the Board of Trade, inasmuch as disaster to one of the principals the-powerful adversary in speculation chanced to be in love with his daughter and complete series of studies of the leaders in our American business world, the editors brought about a settlement that saved the defeated one from bankruptcy. A point of honesty is involved in the opening story, of The Cosmopolitan believed that they would be rendering a distinct service to the general public. Louis, has written another book, entitled "Brickbats and Bouquets." In his preface, Coionel Joyce says his object was to "throw klin-dried brickbats of truth at the horrid head of hypocrisy, envy, malice, selfishness and tyranny. The bouquets I throw at the nodest few, the personliked gods and god-desses speak for themselves." Published by F. Tennyson Neely, New York.

Charles Felton Pidgin in "Biennerhasset" wrote little to redound to the credit of Alex-ander Hamilton. In his last book, "The Climax, or What Might Have Been," he continues his course in extelling the politi-cal virtues of Auron Burr. The romance has to do with the time when Burr was elected Governor of New York and when many exciting events are supposed to have occurred. The author frankly admits that his story esunot be historically true but excusts his unreliability by asking the reader if it would not be better if it were true. The story will interest admirers of Mr. Pidgin's previous work. C. M. Clark Publishing Company, Boston.

"The Little Citizen," by M. E. Waller, is a good juvenile story. It is the narrative of the development of a walf of New York street in the simple and wholesome life of a Vermont farmer neighborhood. The lad, Miffins, is taken into the household of Jacob Foss, a farmer. The story tells of the transformation wrought in Miffins's char-acter. With its study of the evolution of a street gamin into a useful little citizen and with its graphic descriptions of Vermont

The papers have one purpose: It is to show the effect on Christian doctrine of a consistent belief in Jesus Christ.

Justin Harvey Smith, the author of the papers on "The Prologue of the American Revolution," which are to appear in the Century during the year 1900, has been professor of modern history at Dartmouth since the chair was established, in 127.
